Peter Fowler, the grandson of Ernest Rutherford, was, like O Ceallaigh, a member of Cecil Powell's cosmic ray group at Bristol. An ingenious experimenter, he continued his studies using airborne detectors in balloons, aircraft and satellites, where his results on heavy nuclei provided valuable input for our understanding of element formation in supernovae.